

Free the Sheep

“Free the sheep!” bleated the sheep. Close by, the farm dogs heard the sheep’s cries. The dogs ran quickly to see what the matter was.

Free the Sheep

“Can’t you hear us weep?” asked Poppy, the white sheep. “We need some relief. We are bored of the grass in this field,” she said.

Free the Sheep

“Very funny. Nice try,” said Ned, the spotty farm dog. “We can’t let you out of the paddock, you will get lost in the valley,” he said.

Free the Sheep

“If we do that, Farmer James will be furious with us,” said Ted, the brown farm dog. Ned nodded. “Please, the grass in the valley is much sweeter,” said Penny.

Free the Sheep

“It’s a sunny day. We won’t go far. We won’t get lost,” said Poppy. “How about a treat, if you let us out?” asked Penny, the black sheep.

Free the Sheep

“What kind of treat?” asked Ned. “A sweet treat! Charge!” yelled Poppy. The sheep barged through the fence and raced off to the valley. Even the dogs could not stop them.

Free the Sheep

“Let’s go chase them back. Farmer James will not be happy,” said Ted. “I am in disbelief. Those funny sheep. To the valley!” said Ned. The dogs shook their heads and took off after the sheep.

Free the Sheep