A Fork in the Road

(ow oe o-e o ou)

“Which way should we go?” said Mat. “How do I know?” said Pat. The boys had come to a fork in the road. They had to stop in their tracks.

“I have some oat cookies in my lunchbox. How about we throw the crows some oats and then we go left?” said Pat.

“One problem, we do not have a bone,” said Mat. “How about a stone?” said Pat. “That dog will know the stone is not a bone,” said Mat.

“Last time I went left here, the crows in Farmer Joe’s oak trees chased me,” said Pat.

"Although, last time I went right here, I woke up Farmer Brown's farm dog. He chased me," said Mat. "This is a hard choice," he said.

"How will we get home?" asked Pat. "Oh, I have a good idea," said Mat. "Let's throw the farm dog an old bone," he said. "Agreed. So, you want to take a right at the fork in the road," said Pat.
