

A Fork in the Road

“Which way should we go?” said Mat. “How do I know?” said Pat. The boys had come to a fork in the road. They had to stop in their tracks.

A Fork in the Road

“Last time I went left here, the crows in Farmer Joe’s oak trees chased me,” said Pat.

A Fork in the Road

“Although, last time I went right here, I woke up Farmer Brown’s farm dog. He chased me,” said Mat. “This is a hard choice,” he said.

A Fork in the Road

“How will we get home?” asked Pat. “Oh, I have a good idea,” said Mat. “Let’s throw the farm dog an old bone,” he said. “Agreed. So, you want to take a right at the fork in the road,” said Pat.

A Fork in the Road

“One problem, we do not have a bone,” said Mat. “How about a stone?” said Pat. “That dog will know the stone is not a bone,” said Mat.

A Fork in the Road

“I have some oat cookies in my lunchbox. How about we throw the crows some oats and then we go left?” said Pat.

A Fork in the Road

“Here goes!” said Pat. The boys throw the oat crumbs to the crows. The plan works. Both the boys take the left fork in the road and run home together. Safe from the crows.

A Fork in the Road