Afraid of Snakes

Are you still afraid of snakes? Now that you know more about snakes, perhaps you will change your mind?

(ay a-e a ey ea)

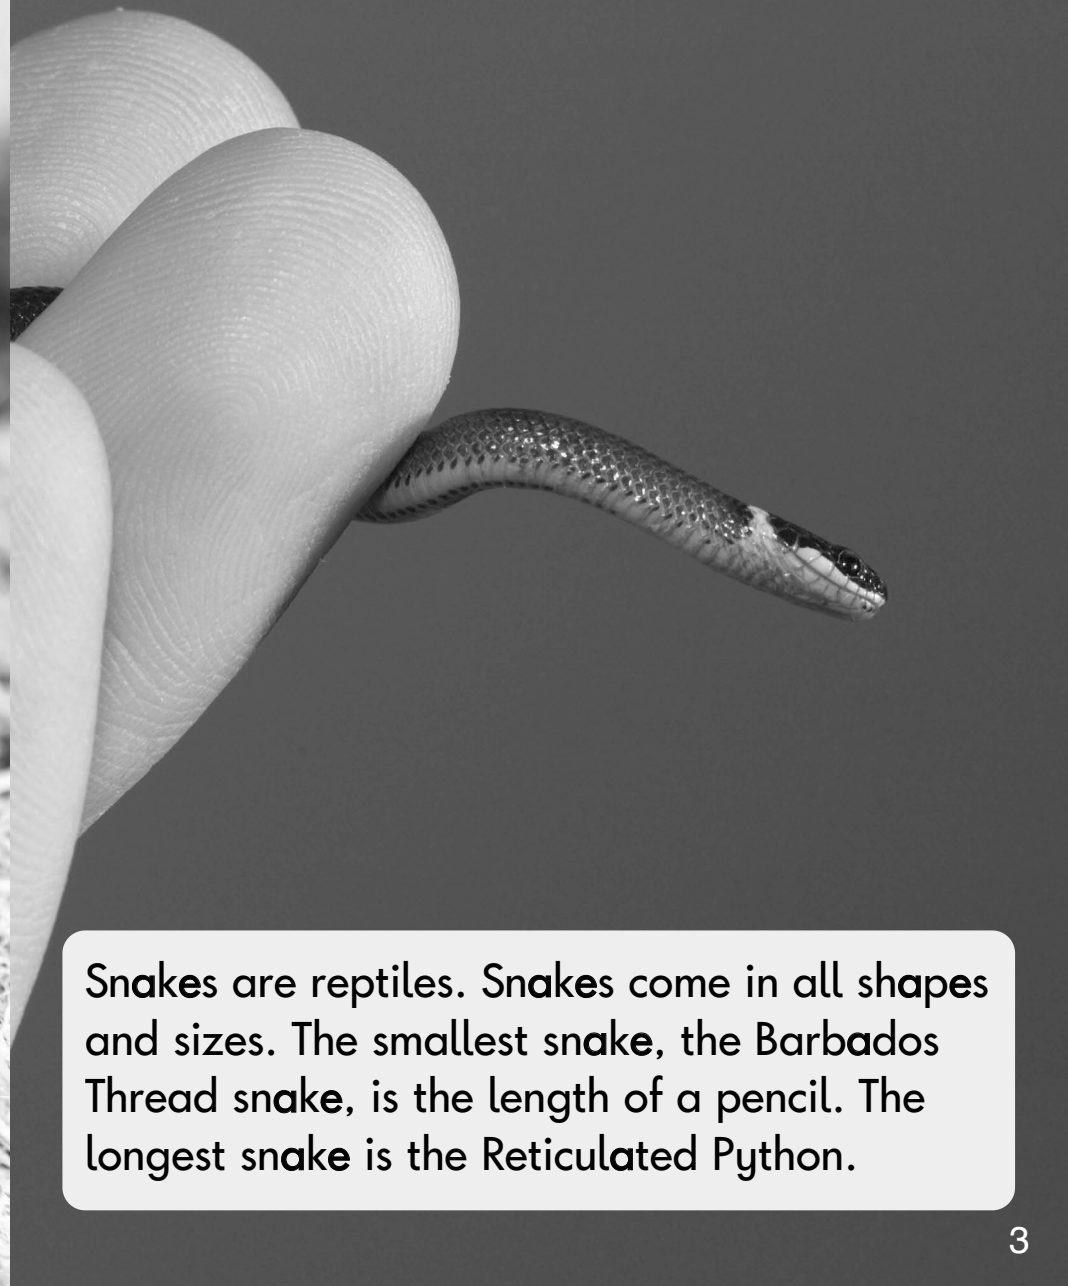

Are you afraid of snakes? It's true that they may look scary and some are venomous. But wait, snakes sure are great when you get to know them.

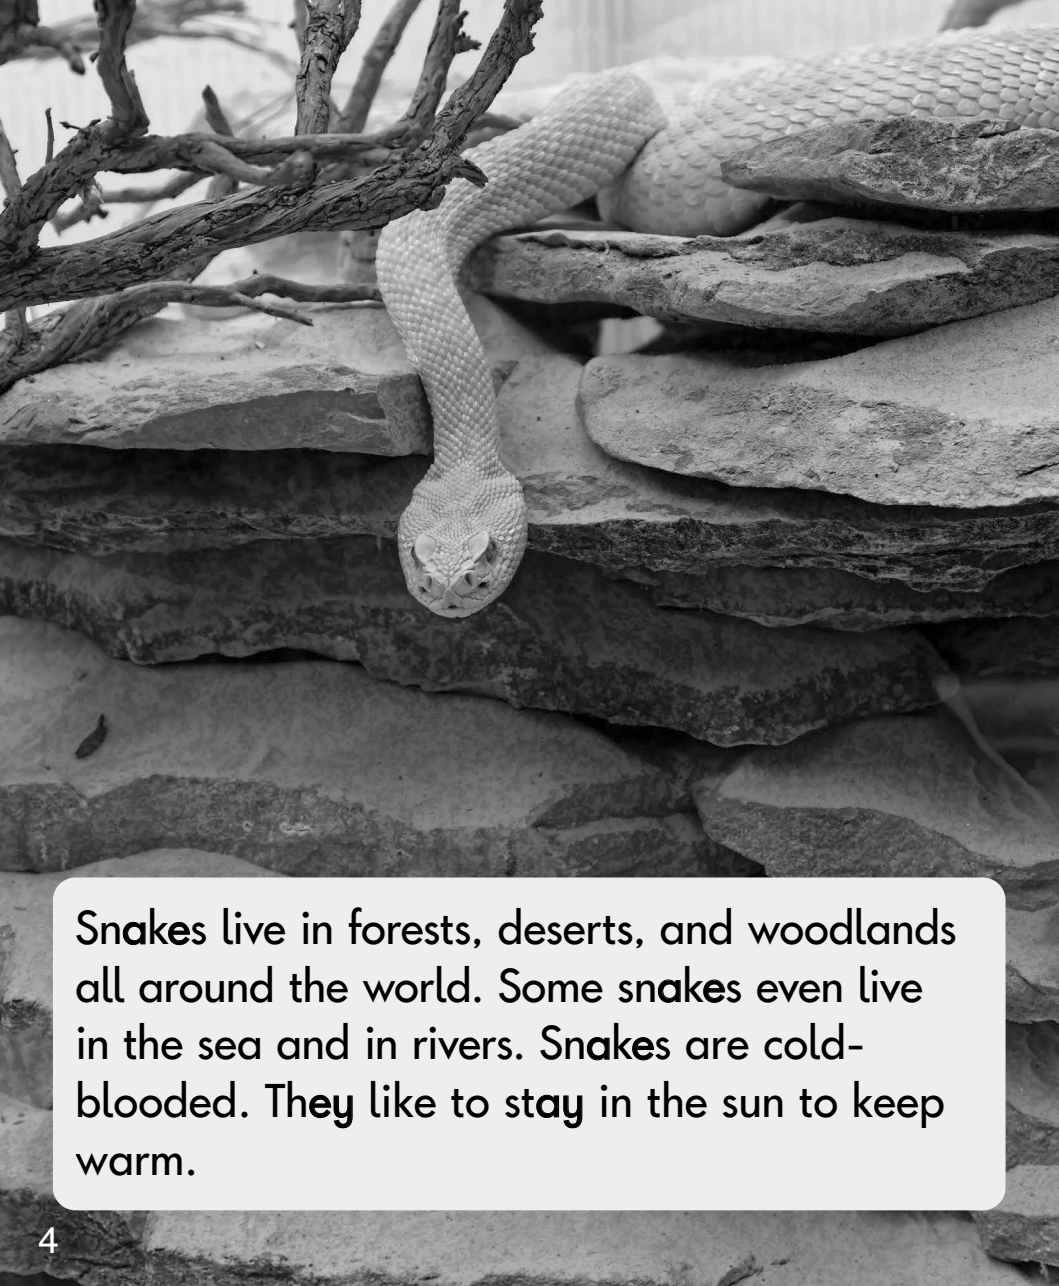

Snakes are carnivores. They eat other animals. Snakes choose their food based on the size of its body. They open their mouths wide and swallow their prey whole.

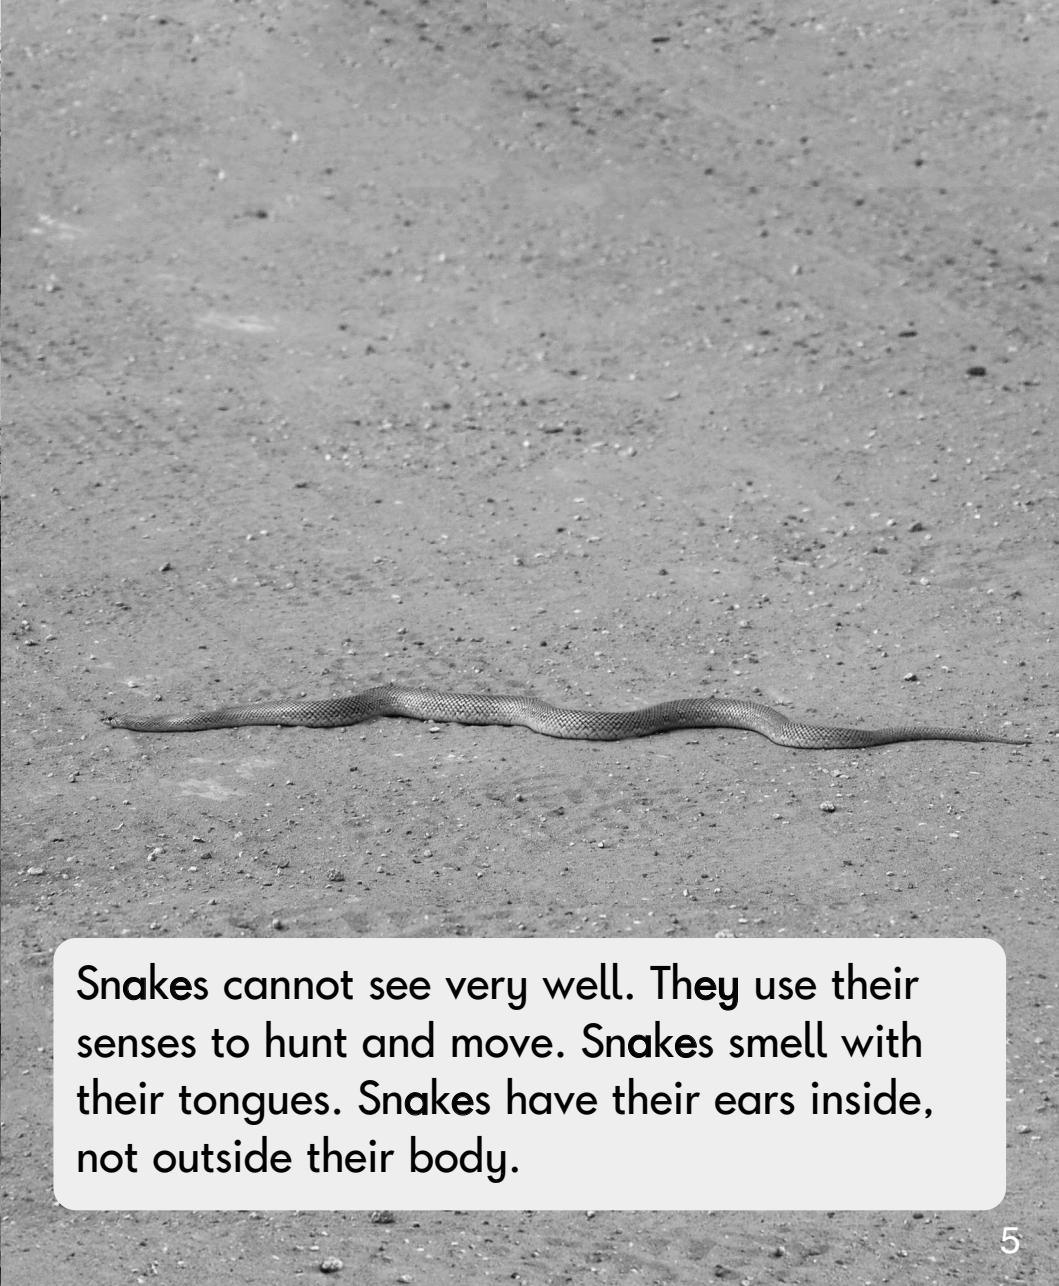

A few times each year, snakes shed their skin. This is because their skin does not grow at the same speed as their body.

Snakes are reptiles. Snakes come in all shapes and sizes. The smallest snake, the Barbados Thread snake, is the length of a pencil. The longest snake is the Reticulated Python.

Snakes live in forests, deserts, and woodlands all around the world. Some snakes even live in the sea and in rivers. Snakes are cold-blooded. They like to stay in the sun to keep warm.

Snakes cannot see very well. They use their senses to hunt and move. Snakes smell with their tongues. Snakes have their ears inside, not outside their body.
