Ted and Sid travel by donkey on a long day trek. The sun is beating down on them and the donkey is getting hot.

Ted hops off the donkey. "We should stop here. Our donkey needs a rest," said Ted. Ted leans back on the cliff to rest and a secret door flings open.

The donkey chews on hay as the boys look around. Next, Ted launches himself into the dark tunnel.

"Wait, Ted! This tunnel looks dark and it might be haunted!" yells Sid. Sid blew some dust and cobwebs off the door. He follows Ted into the tunnel.

"What is in here? Where are we?" whispers Ted. "There are a few spiders in here," said Sid. "I have read about this Aztec chamber," said Ted. "Look at the wall paintings," whispers Ted.

"The paintings can tell us so much about the Aztecs. Look at that. The Aztecs grew crops like beans, potatoes and tomatoes," said Sid. "They drew about the sun and the gods," said Ted.

Draw What We See

"Let us draw what we see," said Ted. The boys get out a sketch book and draw. "This could be a new discovery," grins Sid.
