The next day, they awoke to a beautiful day. “Wake up Pip, the storm has cleared! The sun is out. The condor is back,” said Sam. “We can keep going up the mountain. Off we go!” smiles Pip.

Sam and Pip are in the Andes. They move up the mountain with speed. Ice picks and poles will help them to reach the peak.

The girls follow the chinchilla inside a cave. The chinchilla snuggles up to them to stay warm. The snow storm rumbles outside. The girls feel safe. They go to sleep next to their new friend.

"It might be a good idea to find shelter," said Sam. "We should wait for the storm to pass," said Pip. The wind picks up. "It feels like snow is yet to come," said Pip.

In the mountain valley, Sam spies an alpaca chewing grass. "Look, that alpaca is cute," whispers Sam. "And, look up there! It is a condor!" said Pip.

A little chinchilla hops by the girls. “Why is it hopping away so fast?” asks Sam. A cool wind blows through the valley. “I feel chilled to the bone,” said Pip.

Big, dark clouds move in above them. “Those clouds look like storm clouds,” said Pip. “I want to go home,” said Sam.
