

The Dolphin Alphabet

Ted and Mat are deep in the Amazon rainforest. They have spied a pink dolphin in the river. The pink river dolphin is called the 'boto'.

The Dolphin
Alphabet

The boys refer to their travel book to learn more about this curious creature. "Dolphins can talk to each other," reads Ted.

The Dolphin
Alphabet

"Starting from birth, dolphins can click, whistle and squeak," he said. "A pod of dolphins can chatter to each other," Ted read.

The Dolphin
Alphabet

Mat picks up the book to read some more facts. "Dolphins can also communicate with jaw claps, fin pats and bubble blowing," read Mat.

The Dolphin
Alphabet

The pink dolphin in the river claps its flippers to the boys. He whistles at them. "Do you think he is asking us to come play?" said Ted.

The Dolphin
Alphabet

"Do you think he can say where to find the best fish?" asks Mat. The dolphin squeaks and squeaks at them. The dolphin blows some bubbles at them.

The Dolphin
Alphabet

"Do you think the dolphin has an alphabet?" said Ted. Mat shrugs. "One thing I am sure about is that dolphins know how to have fun!" said Mat.

The Dolphin
Alphabet

The Dolphin Alphabet

The Dolphin
Alphabet

