

The Lava Tunnel

Pat and Mat have walked the foothills of the rainforest for days on end. The pair are searching for a volcano. They set up camp next to a waterfall to rest.

The Lava Tunnel

Behind the waterfall, Pat found a crevasse deep down in the ground. Inside the crevasse, there is some red, hot lava boiling down below.

The molten lava flows into a tunnel. "This is the lava tunnel that I was looking for," said Mat.

"This is proof that there is an active volcano here," said Mat. "But, look here. On the map, there is no volcano shown," said Pat.

"Well then, perhaps we have discovered the first volcano in this rainforest," grins Mat. "Quick, take my photograph with the lava flowing behind me. This is sure to make the news," he said.

"I am not too sure that this is safe," said Pat. "If we are on the edge of an active volcano, we should get out of here fast," she said.

The ground below them starts to rumble and shake. "No time for a photograph, let's run!" yells Mat.
