The Tennis Players

Later in the lesson, the coach said to the girls, “The most important thing about becoming a tennis player is that you have fun.” Sam and Pat smile back at him. “We have had a lot of fun, thank you,” they both said. “See you next week, ready for game, set and match,” grins Pat.

Today, Sam and Pat are going to the tennis club. Pat has booked a tennis lesson with one of the trainers. “I don’t know how to play tennis,” whispers Sam. “That’s what the trainer is for. They will teach us some easy tennis tricks,” said Pat.

“Our next lesson?” asks Pat. Their coach nods and smiles. The lesson is much longer and harder than Pat and Sam expected.

“When do we actually get to play tennis?” puffs Pat. “When you can handle the racquet and can control your hitting of the ball. Then, I will start to teach you how to serve at our next lesson,” he said.

“I think it will take more than one lesson before I am a tennis player,” said Sam. “I’m confident this is all we need to be tennis players,” smiled Pat. Sam is not so sure.

When the girls arrive at the tennis club, the trainer explains some basic rules of tennis. He shows them how to hold their racquets for forehand and backhand.

The trainer does some basic tennis drills with the girls. Pat and Sam do a lot of running, hitting and picking up tennis balls. It is hot work and the girls are getting tired.
